Would You Like to Be Freed From Slavery to Glasses? If So, Read the Interesting Book Now Obtainable Free.

It is predicted that within a few years eyeglasses and spectacles will be so scarce that there will be no demand for them except as curiosities, and we may see the signs of their coming at two cents a pair. This is consistent with the progress of science in this age of wireless telegraph, telephone, phonograph, etc., but especially in the marvelous advancement of knowledge in saving lives and health—including that of the all-important organs of sight.

Eyeglasses Are Merely Eye Crutches.
 A book has been written by Dr. Corish, an eminent New York physician, on eyeglasses and other eye disorders which cause so much trouble to those afflicted, including the need of wearing eyeglasses or spectacles.

This treatise explains a simple, safe, self-treatment method whereby one who wears eyeglasses, or fears the need of them, may gradually strengthen the eye muscles and membranes of the eyes until they are in so much better condition that "optician's windows" are unnecessary. Any one who reads the book soon realizes that Dr. Corish has given the world what it has long desired—a system of eye training that is absolutely devoid of tolladonna, opium, atropine or other harmful drugs, commonly used in eye remedies, and which depend chiefly upon the principles of nature.

Dr. Corish has written enthusiastically, yet carefully. He comes forward with the claim that eyeglasses must go, and that you receive.

Okola Laboratory, Dept. 1022, Rochester, N. Y. But the book will come to you promptly, in plain wrapper gratis, postpaid.

Health Damaged by Ailing Eyes.
 Weak or ailing eyes do not hold their disorders within themselves, but are often allied with other serious troubles, such as headaches, nervousness, neurasthenia, sleeplessness, morbid cravings, fear of approaching calamity, inability to concentrate thoughts, irritability, dependency and a long train of other afflictions which could be eliminated if the eyes were brought to a normal condition, so that glasses need not be used. The book tells about these disorders and how to overcome them.

How to Possess Beautiful Eyes.
 Get rid of your glasses, and the simple method explained in the book, and you may soon become the possessor of beautiful, expressive, soulful magnetic eyes, such as are the admiration of all. Millions are to-day wearing glasses which could soon discard them if they adopted the method brought forth by Dr. Corish. A person with natural perfect eyesight, free from all defects, is the best thing in the world.

Valuable Book Is Free to You.
 "Worth its weight in gold," is one of the expressions often used in praising Dr. Corish's book. It is interesting for men and women of all ages. This treatise and the method described, as well as parts of our advertisement, are being illustrated—as are all good things—but brass could never replace true gold, neither could anything else take the place of Dr. Corish's book and method, so do not delay, but write now. You will be surprised and delighted with what you receive.

GOSSIP OF PARTS OF EUROPE NOW IN THE PUBLIC EYE

(Copyright, 1913, by Court Joseph Syndicate.)
 To those who are associated with the exhibition phase of canine culture it must be gratifying to know that dogs from the British Royal kennels are being entered again for competition at important shows. It is not generally known that dogs of high degree have long been in favor with members of the royal family.

Queen Victoria was a great lover of animals, the horse and dog because of their faithfulness and devotion appealing strongly to her sympathy and affection. On more than one occasion she encouraged shows by sending dogs for exhibition. The late King Edward VII and Queen Alexandra also warmly supported the canine cause, keeping an extensive kennel, and not only entering dogs for competition but visiting shows themselves and evincing interest in the exhibits.

In human affairs King Edward's name will be remembered with love and gratitude because of his great influence on the nations for peace and good will, by those whose regard for dogs goes beyond the outward aspect and takes count of disposition and character, the memory of the late king, however, is being preserved because of the support he gave to those who eighteen years ago stood up for the abolition of the ear-cropping practice. For many years this was the subject of controversy. It has been the fashion for a long time while to clip off a portion of the ear of some breeds, to impart alertness of expression, and quite naturally, it was believed that if the practice were abolished, those particular varieties would decline in popularity.

Resolutions were brought forward at the Kennel Club meetings without avail, and the advocates of reform were beginning to despair of success, when a correspondent addressed a letter to King Edward—then of course, Prince of Wales—and the reply was so clear and emphatic that in a remarkably short space of time ear-cropping was a thing of the past in Britain.

King Edward pointed out that, although he had long possessed dogs and had shown them at exhibitions, he had never allowed himself to be misled. He further stated that it would give him much pleasure to hear that the objectionable fashion had been abandoned. Thus it was that a custom which was cruel, and unbecoming to dogs, and with one can imagine how deep would have been the gratitude of our four-footed friends had they had the gift of understanding for King Edward's intervention on their behalf.

Though King Edward is no more, dogs still have their home at Sandringham, and Mr. Hunsdon, the head kennelman, possesses something of a fine knowledge of the ways of dogs, their anatomy, their perfections and imperfections, and the hundred and one details in kennel management that only long experience imparts. He has genuine enthusiasm for the dog, and an appreciation of those beautiful attributes that in the quest for type and prize money many are apt to overlook. He declares that we set too high a store by our dogs' physical virtues, the length of the head or the texture of the coat. We forget that one can no more measure the higher qualities of the canine heart and brain by the run of the dog's head, the jaw, or lack of it, than one can measure the worth of a man by the cut of his coat.

If dogs had nothing better to recommend themselves to our attention than their place in the life of our community would have reached the vanishing point long ago. The dogs at Sandringham are in charge of one who has an affection for them, and this, no doubt, is the reason why the trust given him by the late King Edward twenty-six years ago was renewed by Queen Alexandra.

The kennels at Sandringham are extensive. They are in a brick building 100 yards in length, and all the fittings are of iron, no woodwork is used. The varieties kept there are Samoyeds, St. Bernards, Bernese, Cocker spaniels, poodles, Scottish terriers, rough and smooth basenjis, fox terriers, wire and smooth, black pug, Scotch terrier, and Pomeranians. Formerly buildings were included of both the English and French variety, but the last representative of the breed died about two years ago, and has not been replaced.

With the exception of the Scottish terriers which belong to Princess Victoria, all these dogs are the property of Queen Alexandra, who takes a real interest in them and pays them a visit whenever the opportunity occurs. Her special pets are, however, the faithful Caesar, the wire-haired fox terrier who was presented to King Edward, four Japanese spaniels, and a Pomeranian. To these are given the great privilege of living in the house at Sandringham, and one may be sure that the favor is appreciated.

Caesar is her majesty's constant companion. He accompanies her everywhere and he is everything in the way of faithfulness and devotion to his mistress that the popular imagination pictures him to be. "Tooky" folk will be interested to learn that Caesar is not only a dog of the highest companionable virtues, but a typical specimen of his breed. He has taken his place with honor in the showing and won for his late master several first prizes. This is not surprising when it is remembered that the famous "Cackler" of Nottinghamshire was his sire.

The Prince of Wales is genuinely interested in dogs, and the success which the young prince has achieved lately at the Crystal Palace, Brixton, and Cannes, will doubtless give zest to his fancy for the smart game little terrier which is identified with the country from which the prince takes his title.

The foreign tour of ex-King Manuel of Portugal, from which he has returned to England, was occasioned by a much-needed treatment for his nerves. His journey on the Continent has done him good, especially his experiences at Berlin, where, it is said, he was a daily or better, frequent of the salons of the underworld. In St. Petersburg he could not keep up the pace with the youthful Grand Duke Dimitri Pavlovitch, whose favorite amusement it is to skim over the ice and guard the skating rink with his hands crossed in those of some pretty girl. Manuel had to be content to look on.

There was no state hospitality in his honor. Only once he was asked to Tsarskoe Selo to lunch with the Czar, and on the eve of his departure. He left behind a memory of plaintive melancholy. There is a night resort at St. Petersburg called the Villa Rhode, to which Manuel sometimes went to supper, but he never preferred the vivacious Parisiennes to the fascinations of the somber, though exceedingly charming Slav women.

His chief companion was a young Russian, Count Felix Sumarokoff-Estion, heir the Prince Yussupoff. He is the descendant of a Scotch Jacobite exile whose progeny married a succession of Russian heiresses until now the family is the largest private land owner in all the empire. Count Felix is expected to wed Princess Louise, daughter of Admiral Prince Louis of Battenberg, of the British navy, and a niece of Queen Mary and the Czarina. He was ex-King Manuel's host during most of his stay in the New capital. After leaving Russia, Manuel spent several weeks in Berlin, where he occupied rooms at the Kaiserhof Hotel, traveling incognito as Count d'Ouren, and there he saw and enjoyed the change of the underworld thoroughly, returning with a far better set of nerves than he had and their ladies will attend, together with their secretaries and their attaches. All the Cabinet ministers and former members are expected to attend, as well as a host of other official personages. Members of the royal family who will then be in England will all be present.

It seems to be the expectation among London's court set that it is the duty of the United States to send an ambassador to Britain who is able to play a great and costly role in English society. Paul Mall, Bolandville, and Pleschall have made up their minds that it would greatly gratify the majority of Americans who reside or travel in Europe to see the envoys of their nation housed in fine style in the Carlton House Terrace neighborhood.

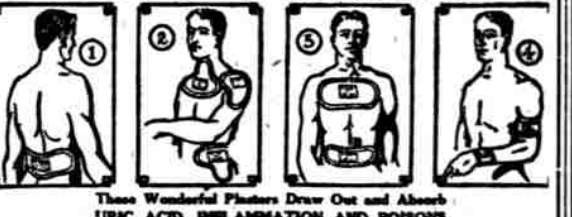

Well, at any rate, the last three American ambassadors have been men of vast private fortunes, which they considered it their duty to spend lavishly in a fit representation of their country. They certainly have shown English high life "how to do" things, and the latter would feel keenly the difference if the coming ambassador should be a man of simple taste and moderate means, for Whitelaw Reid made Rochester House the scene of gorgeous—if not the most gorgeous—entertainments. Wonder whom the new apostle of simplicity in the White House will find financially able and willing to do as Whitelaw Reid did?
